

Hot Zone Rescue for First Responders

The most dangerous element of any HAZMAT incident, both to the exposed victims and the rescuers, is the rescue from the hot zone. Rescue operations should always be performed using appropriate personal protective equipment (PPE). With the most recent revision to NFPA 472, and the addition of mission specific objectives, properly trained First Response Operations trained personnel can perform "Hot Zone Rescue." This program will identify the needed competencies for the responder to perform safely and effectively using firefighter turn out gear to perform hot zone rescue.
